The Far Eastern Electric Company reported that construction work on the new machinery factory at Han-yang Road in Ta-lien is nearing completion. This new factory is being constructed to merge the old tool factory and the acid and metal factory to increase production by centralization. It is to be divided into 10 sections: casting, riveting, electric works, dockyard, machinery, acids, enamelware, sheet metal, stamping and pattern-making. The company now employs about 1,900, but this figure is to be increased to about 5,500 through recruitment of about 3,600 additional casters, riveters, and lathe workers.

According to a company official, plans are underway to establish a technical school to train youths and to organize a special technical training section within the factory to improve performance of the administrative and technical personnel of the plant. In addition, plans are being made to construct a communal mess hall, living quarters and washing facilities for the benefit of employees.
